Ethics and Deontology Overview

Ethics provides a framework for assessing right and wrong, while deontology emphasizes duty and moral rules. Kant's deontological ethics guides moral actions independent of consequences, focusing on moral duty.

Core Principles of Deontology

Deontology is an ethical theory that judges actions based on duty and moral rules. It emphasizes moral obligations that apply universally, independent of personal consequences or benefits.

The Categorical Imperative Explained

The Categorical Imperative is Kant’s key ethical principle, guiding moral judgment through universalizability, respect for humanity, and a vision of an ethical community, ensuring actions align with moral duty.

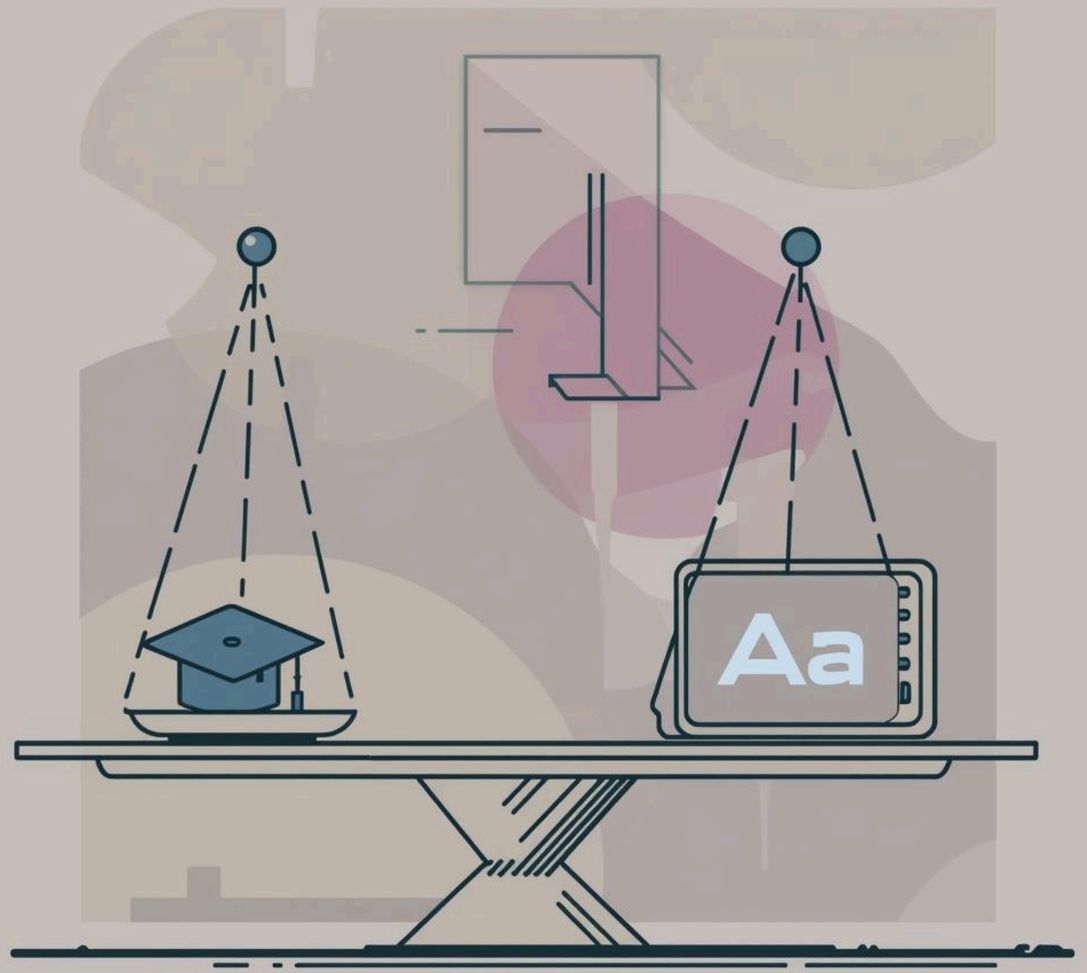

Ethical Dilemma of AI Assignments

A student submits an AI-generated assignment as their own work, creating an ethical dilemma regarding academic integrity. This raises questions about the morality of such actions under Kant's ethical framework.

Universal Law Evaluation

The Universal Law formulation highlights that if everyone submitted AI-generated assignments, academic honesty would vanish, undermining education's value and misrepresenting students' abilities, rendering the action morally unacceptable.

Evaluating Humanity as an End

Submitting AI work misleads instructors and undermines honest students, using the education system solely for grades. This behavior violates respect for dignity, making it morally wrong according to Kantian ethics.

Third Formulation: Kingdom of Ends

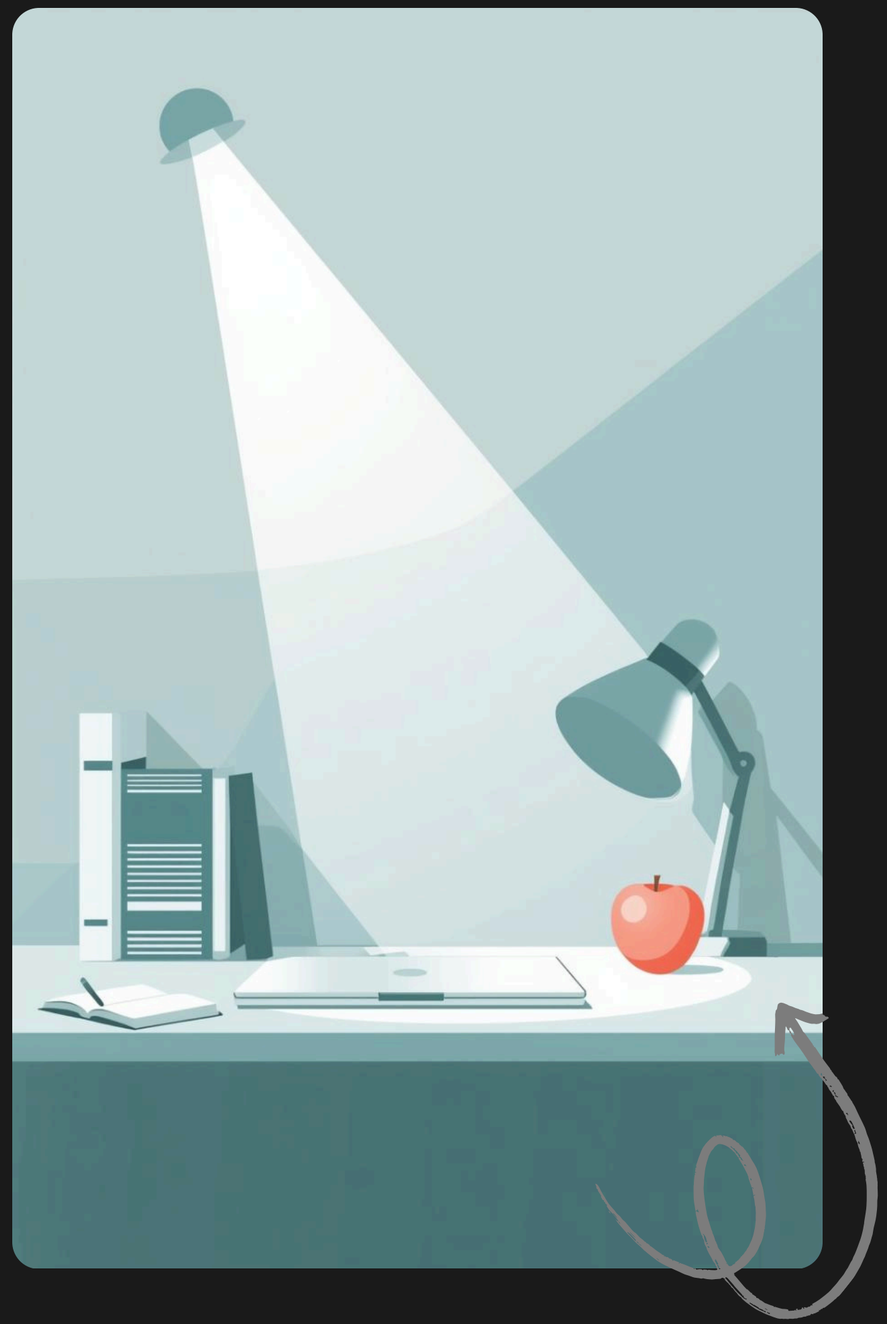

Evaluating the scenario reveals that submitting undisclosed AI work breaks shared moral standards, undermining the integrity of the academic community. This action is not acceptable in a moral community focused on ethical principles.

Summary of Kant’s Three Formulations

Kant’s formulations reveal that submitting AI-generated assignments is unethical: it cannot be universalized, uses others as means, and violates academic integrity, emphasizing the need for honesty in education.
